The cathedral was heavily bombed in 1943 but was cared for in the aftermath. The church has 3 naves separated by large octagonal pillars. This is a substantial complex which was consecrated in 1508. It was built on plans by architects Giovanni da Udine and Giorgio Squarcione. The nave is 33 metres wide and 97 metres long. The central nave is of particular interest with its magnificent Gothic presentation, exemplified by the main altar, the central tower and the belfry. The altars and frescoes are by Giovanni Squarcione. The main altar is the Crucifixion with the Virgin and St John. In the arch between the nave and the choir, above the main altar, which features S. Francesco receiving the stigmata from St. Francis, are frescoes by Antonio Allegri known as Correggio. The nave is divided into three aisles, each with a gilded wooden ceiling. The nave is dominated by the 13th century fresco of the Annunciation and the 16th century frescoes by Giovanni Squarcione. The nave is adorned with a series of magnificent paintings on the walls and the chapel ceilings. The church has 44 chapels, each with its own artistic style and character. The main altar is the tomb of St. John the Baptist, designed by Giovanni Squarcione and completed in 1508. The church also contains the tombs of the Bishops of Bolzano and the Capuchin Church.
